Studies on the interaction of dihydropyridine calcium antagonists with insulin. The effects of the calcium antagonists nifedipine, nitrendipine, and nicardipine ($10(-7)$ to $10(-4)$ M) on the in vitro and in vivo insulin binding and insulin dependent adenylate cyclase activation were studied using rat adipocytes, calf muscle, and rat adipocytes. Nifedipine, nitrendipine, and nicardipine did not alter the binding of 125 I-insulin to cultured rat adipocytes. The adenylate cyclase activation by insulin in cultured rat adipocytes and in rat adipocytes was decreased by 1 mM nifedipine. In cultured rat adipocytes, insulin-induced concentration-dependent increases of intracellular cyclic AMP concentration were completely inhibited by $10(-5)$ M dihydropyridines. In the presence of 1 mM nifedipine, the maximum increases of intracellular cyclic AMP concentration induced by insulin (50 microU/ml) were as follows: 3.23 ± 0.15 , 2.84 ± 0.28 , 3.05 ± 0.35 , and 3.14 ± 0.24 mumol/ $10(6)$ adipocytes in control, $10(-7)$, $10(-6)$, and $10(-5)$ M nifedipine, respectively. In the presence of $10(-7)$ to $10(-6)$ M nifedipine, nicardipine, or nitrendipine, no significant inhibition of insulin-induced intracellular cyclic AMP concentration was observed. The inhibition by nifedipine was not reversed by the addition of exogenous cyclic AMP. (ABSTRACT TRUNCATED AT 250 WORDS) Do the results of repeat electrical muscle stimulation of the upper limb predict outcome in children with Duchenne muscular dystrophy? Duchenne muscular dystrophy (DMD) is a muscle disease resulting in progressive muscle wasting.
